

CareAnyware Reports Record Growth and Expanded Sales Staff.

(Research Triangle Park, NC) February 15, 2008

Following a year of record growth, CareAnyware is expanding its sales force along with all other functional areas of the company.

“CareAnyware is positioned to make life easier for home care agencies,” says senior sales executive Terry Bryant as he explains one of the reasons he recently joined the growing CareAnyware sales force. “The concept behind CareAnyware’s solution helps take the workload off the agency and allows the agency to focus on patients,” he adds.

CareAnyware provides home health and hospice providers with a mobile and web-based solution that frees them from the need to purchase and maintain costly information technology (IT) systems and applications internally. Clinicians and office staff alike can access the CareAnyware solution from virtually any web browser, whether at home, in the office or out in the field.

CareAnyware develops and manages the technology behind its innovative solutions. It maintains agencies’ applications by sending automatic updates through the web. As a result, agencies are not forced to spend time ensuring their systems and applications are updated at the right time and in the right manner.

“Large corporations have used this type of technology model for years,” Bryant says. CareAnyware CEO Rich Guerin agrees. “Our web-based technology gives home care agencies a new opportunity to focus on their core competencies,” he explains, “instead of all the details of keeping computing systems updated with ever-evolving industry regulations and technical changes. I see this as the beginning of a new era that will re-define the relationships agencies have with their software vendors.”

Before joining CareAnyware, Bryant was a top salesperson for Patient Care Technologies in Atlanta. In his new role at CareAnyware, Bryant will service clients in the southwest region of the country.

“We are very pleased to have Terry join our organization,” Guerin says. “We feel that both existing customers and new clients will benefit tremendously from his insight and his many years of experience in the healthcare arena.”
